What's your project management story?

Publish your personal story about project management in the PM World Journal

20 November 2014 – Dallas, London, Sydney – PM World is inviting project managers and project management professionals worldwide to submit personal stories for publication in the PM World Journal. A story can be about a career or project-related experience, a program or project worked on, a solution found or a challenge overcome.

Some examples might include something about:

- A project in an exotic or unusual location
- A project management problem overcome
- A career move, or a career-related decision
- A program or project success, and how it came about
- A project team-related experience, either positive or not

According to Managing Editor David Pells, “Our lives are full of stories, from our career, projects we’ve worked on, people we’ve worked with, even problems and solutions. Stories are also proven vehicles for sharing and teaching. If you have a story to tell, and who doesn’t, write it up and send it to me.”

“We would love to publish some interesting personal stories in either the December or January edition,” Pells added. “Actually, we hope to include personal stories in more monthly editions in the future, stories from around the world where so many different experiences can be found.”

Personal stories about any aspect of project management can be emailed to editor@pmworldjournal.net at any time.
